THE KATERI CHANTING

Joseph Faulds
Northeastern Oklahoma State University

THE SEVEN VOICES SPEAKING FROM THE SEVEN DIRECTIONS

Priest: from the North Mother: from the East Friend: from the South
Uncle: from the West Holy Woman: from the Sky the People: from the earth Kateri: from the Center

(Here follows the first three voices of the work in progress:)

HOLY WOMAN SPEAKING FROM THE SKY

The old ones say time is the womb of eternity enveloped by eternity for seeded by the Creator in the spirals of time time gives birth to the sunlight incarnate on the waters which flow into the sea of forever and enlighten our path if we only know to open the eyes of our hearts and see the holy road before us He brought me a sacred child blinded by the disease of the strange ones they arrived in the evening as shadows fell but I saw her bathed in light light playing light shining around her they were only two who came to me but I kept seeing glimpses of holy ones standing all around her protecting her and before her suddenly appeared a figure with wings of light an eagle man with bright shining from his long dark hair holding a lance of light the light growing so bright I threw my blanket over my head and fell to the earth seeking refuge falling like sky woman from the heavens before the bird people caught her before earth diver brought up the soil to spread out on the great turtle's back a place for the people to live So I fell startled to the earth like sky woman amidst the evening shadows flickering all around us all around us light and darkness gentle in the leaves and her uncle said to me "what's the matter with you, holy woman?
there's no one here but us you know me, I am not crazy, I do not drink the English rum I mean you no harm, and this little one, my niece she is now my daughter I want you to help her I have tobacco for you" I looked out from under my blanket slowly, carefully, rising to my feet he had not seen, the great soldier did not see the other world and the other world's people were kindly veiled now from my sight except for a faint shining around the child herself and here was the holy child they loved, they must have loved her so the child standing before me "she's blind," he said, Don't you see? from the sickness of the evil ones, she feels her way, Tekakwitha, do something for her
holy woman
she is my daughter now" yes, I said I can help her eyes some but you, great warrior you must remember my words for these my words come from the realm of spirit from the good place where the heart can be only one and no two heart ever goes there be careful of this holy child or you will someday break your own heart on the mountains of her soul for only the mountains and the sky last forever and there are the great mountains of the spirit world hidden in this little one's heart I have the medicine for sore eyes I will gather from the forest and with the sacred ways the healing prayers of four days I can return some of her sight but the honor gift I ask in return — not this time tobacco
"Anything, he said, anything within my power" only, I said, only that she will remember that you teach her to remember I said, that I asked her in the coming seasons to pray for me in this world and the next will you remember, little one?
I asked, turning to her
She Feels Her Way
kneeling down to touch her face with all those mean scars and she smiled she smiled her yes to me the best smile and her thoughts touched my mind with the goodness that flowed through her from the realm of the good twin's lodge from the song of the wind above me blowing through the green leaves of the great world tree and in her smile I remembered the old song of the marriage of earth and sky which my mother sang to me when I was her child, her little one,
so long ago singing of the sunlight on the combing waters my mother singing in my heart of memories singing, sunlight on the combing waters sings on a summer's morn when quiet reigns in the land and soft lights on a new moon whispering crescent to the greening trees so wayward calls of wandering birds follow distant on the fallow field yellow in a winter's afternoon then good earth with blue sky in truest consummation makes our endless horizon of love becomes one together, two and one forever, a ring conjoined in a circle of doves morning doves white, bright against an azure flight, strong good in nature and in true so chant the song of oneness sing the chant, chant of love remember a turning of all the seasons recall the long springs of desire true promises are treasures and fruited heavy in the loving of our leafing souls today earth and sky have come together earth and sky are one forever sunlight hums on clear flowing waters bright as a summer's day so the child gave me to remember my mother's song and for a moment I was there in the garden of my mother's heart

UNCLE: SPEAKING FROM THE WEST

my friends I remember her so well the little child in my brother's village the sunlight always chased her across mother earth's round breasts the little girl who laughed at squirrels playing in the trees with such happy brown eyes bright eyes, flashing joyous in the sun full of light before the sickness scarred them
I wish I had opened my eyes long ago we did not understand we thought her passion for the Sacred Being foolish, misguided, traitorous, even though we knew she meant no harm we tried to shame her to see the error of her ways I did not understand You see the same ones the ones who came from far away across the ocean who brought us death and disease who wanted our lands the lands of the people these violent, greedy ones I have fought so hard so long with their treacheries, naive snobberies, and shooting sticks and their rum which can steal your heart away their rum which can make you crazy these unbathing ones who always want more, more, more never satisfied after every treaty sealed forever forever for them is only a day And then they say give us more, more of everything they always want more of the people's earth more land, more trees, more streams, more deer more dead native people and they say move a little farther away from us our God has given us your land no longer your land we want more land, they say these greedy invaders from far away the ones who take everything the ones who want the fat of everything I ask you, honestly, how was I to know that their God was any better than his worshippers?
how was I to know
that she simply loved this God so that she did not care what incredible hypocrisies had hidden Him from me that He had chosen her this holy being had chosen her as His love and what more powerful sacred medicine can there be than the way Kateri loved this God in return You would hear her in the whispers of her prayers saying Iesus, I love you Iesus, konoronkwa but I did not see this and I would not listen, my ears were stopped because of my anguish for our people so endangered maybe He is Ravenio I don't know but I miss my daughter all I know is I drove my daughter away I did not see in my own strong heart the greater strength in her heart of love so now I remember the little girl who laughed
the sunlight always chased her and she ran after the sunlight too for sunlight and she were playmates dancing through the light and dark of the wind moving leaves across the grass amid the tall forest trees and then back to her mother the beautiful Meli of the Algonquins who first taken captive by my Mohawk brother in war's fierce sorrows then took him captive with her beauty and goodness and her strange Chrestien ways in joy she loved and became my younger brother's wife beautiful mother of the sun chasing child the last time I saw them together alive she was in her mother's lap and enfolding arms smiling up at me in the summer sunlight listening to her mother's stories of Jesus Nanabozo the Son of our Ravenio, so she did say for my part I do not know I really could not deny it not anymore and her father smoking his pipe frowning at the Christian superstitions but full of love, my younger brother, full of love from his strength for his wife and child a warrior chief like me who could protect them from anything and anyone but the breath of death himself Death who came to our land with the invaders and walking with sorrows . . . with so many sorrows following in his steps the way little children would later happily follow Kateri, my daughter then when the word came later to me through the ancient sun guided trails of the forests that the eating up disease of the invaders small pox, which we had never seen that breathing of death himself that bad medicine they brought with them along with their intense greed for our lands across the great waters had killed my brother and his Algonquin wife and almost, almost their sun chasing daughter, leaving me with a holy child to care for and all I knew was to protect her like the bear protects, growling I did not know that the Highest One had chosen her I did not understand what the holy woman told me for when I found her when I found the little sun chasing one in the ruined village do you know we had always called her the sunlight Girl the laughing daughter now bereft with the pitiful remnant of her clan in that old village most of the longhouses emptied empty after so many generations of life so many bright summers and white winters gone away, lost to us until I go to them soon . . . soon enough but there was the little daughter there before me in the ruins of that smallpox sickened town she could not see anymore to chase the sun among the trees and the wind was not moving but still as she felt her way painfully through the camp this once laughing child so ill our Sunlight Girl our Sunlight Girl afterwards we called her
She Feels Her Way Tekakwitha
who bore the terrible scars and the blindness of death's breathing so she wandered frail hearing of my coming for her and stumbled bumping into the longhouse looking for the door then stumbling over a tree root feeling her way deeper into my heart and each bump and stumble struck my heart with a pain until she heard me call when I could
"Sunlight Girl" and she turned to the sound of my voice "Uncle" in her soft voice calling "Uncle" and I wept and knelt before her as she felt her way into my arms felt her way deeper into my heart into my heart forever my younger brother's daughter, and Meli's daughter, now my daughter, my beloved little daughter who stumbled once and found me put her fresh scarred hands out to my face and softly wiped away my tears Sunlight Girl was her name until her fourth summer until the greedy ones' sickness came and took away her father, her mother, her new baby brother and made the sunlight hurt her eyes the bright light she had so loved with a child's tender love her brown eyes now wincing in that light her blind eyes pained so we called her ever after Tekakwitha
She Feels Her Way
And how I wish now I could feel my way feel my path back to her heart, back to her good smiles to the sound of her voice calling me "Uncle," "My Uncle" but she has gone far from me first running away from my fear for her and from my anger toward the greedy ones whose deity I thought she followed running away from my growls running to her Iesos Nanabozo to a land of summer light and bright shadows where the trees dance always in the winds of heaven when she is Sunlight Girl once more for she felt her way into the heart of the Creator forever
Rawenio who walked among the people Jesus Nanabozo whose love took her from me, from my anger and my fears and no one can wipe away my tears anymore, not anymore as my eyes grow dim with sorrows as my heart weeps in silence as the Holy Woman of the Mohawks forewarned me to be careful of this holy child not to stand in the way of her path when I took her to the holy Woman to help her eyes but I did not listen when I carried her in my arms away from that desolate village
forever

PRIEST: SPEAKING FROM THE NORTH
My brother priest wrote me You will soon see what a treasure I am sending you and I saw
but perhaps I did not see I knew she was a holy child And I watched over her as best I would
but perhaps I did not see really see she was a holy girl who belongs in a special way to our Lord until she left us then I could see do you know, do you know what she said before she died? as her last breath shaped into words I know what she said, know for I was there Iesos, konoronkwa
she said
and I had thought their language the tongue of children until her soul leaving her body spoke those words in a long last breathing my mind translating the words slowly my heart shuddering like a bird struck in flight because then, only then did I know now knowing as she left my care what a treasure God had sent me she said this in the moment of her painful death with utter sincerity and bliss and the words now haunt me forever and I see her in my my dreams as I'm sleeping speaking to me of God's love for her people a holy woman of God
Jesus, I love you
Kateri said
I see her in my dreams every night coming softly in the light like sunlight brightening the shadows of my early morning dreams and I am the one who told this treasure and her close friend when they came to me she could not be a nun because they were too young too young in the faith they wanted to found an order of native women but I said no her people too young in the faith children I thought
Iesos, konoronkwa
Jesus, I love you
her words sang her soul into eternity and left me with my regret and these holy dreams I was so late in recognizing her but yet when her memory returns to me returns to me in the dreams of day so that I can see her in the eyes of my mind standing there before me as of old as I have tried to paint her for the people she asking me to bless the people telling me how much God loves her people then something I have lost comes back to life in me when I remember Kateri’s good smile and I know even with winter’s advent I remember the dreaming time again and I know once again when the trees lose their leaves and the winds become the cold breeze in the November of our lives let us remember and return to all the songs of Spring to that green place of our souls which we left without knowing when and seek the dreaming time again yet I was not dreaming when Kateri died and we all were gathered round her and she died loving God and her Iesos, Iesos Konoronkwa, she said so simply her words cut through my very heart Jesus, I love you
and what happened after she died after her soul winged her way to heaven like the dying eagle's spirit wings its way the eagle sounding without sound to the sun and rising toward God knows the song of the sun so these native people say and when you have been among them long enough like me you begin to see some glimpses of what they keep trying to tell me how patiently they try to teach me and when she died and her mortal remains lay quite like the day of a winter snow when the snow is soft and soundless falling soundless in the sun bright winter then did we hear the wind's rising all around us in the trees full with April's promise of spring and an uncanny light played all round her face which even with the scars was so beautiful, so full of peace that you were drawn to gaze and I rubbed my eyes in wonder, with peace peace like the early spring winds wandering now in the trees as we gazed upon her in wonder peace like a good smile peace you cannot describe all around her body and suddenly we realized the scars of the small pox which had blighted her life and took her family from her the scars for twenty years they had marred her visage though she never complained once the scars, my God, but I tell the truth I tell you what I saw, the scars they disappeared and her skin became as fresh as the beautiful lily which later grew inexplicably from her grave and I am the one who told her
she could not be a nun
too young in the faith, I said, I thought her people nothing more than children to be led like children Kateri
this little one who in a few minutes from her death must have beheld the face of God in Heaven where no scars can mar nor my prejudice injure anymore and the world so full of heavy hatreds cannot weigh down her wings of light any longer this uncanonized saint so patient with our slow hearts Jesus, I love you
she said
I hear her every night as I'm sleeping Kateri in my dreams